

Support for Day to Day Living in the Community – A Structured Activity Program

The Support for Day to Day Living in the Community (D2DL) – a Structured Activity Program, provides $45.5 million over five years to improve the quality of life for individuals with severe and persistent mental illness. This initiative recognises that people with severe mental disorders face significant obstacles to participating in social activities and gaining skills for living independently. The initiative provides day programs to increase the ability of clients to participate in social, recreational and educational activities with the aim of living at an optimal level of independence in the community. Lack of meaningful activities and social roles for people with severe and persistent mental illness can contribute to poor recovery and frequent relapse.

Currently funding of over $21 million is being provided under the initiative over the period 2007-2009 to 60 non government organisations in 49 pre-identified sites across Australia. This funding will provide for 6,968 additional places in new and existing day programs. In consultation with the State-based Council of Australian Governments (COAG) Mental Health Groups, the location of the D2DL programs have been based on need, linkages to clinical and community support services and the capacity of the non-government sector in each area.
